Students help repair damage to Bristol's oldest black gravesites

BRISTOL, Va. — Wilhelmina Banks wiped tears from her eyes as workers used a truck to hoist the gravestones of her mother and grandfather.

It brought mixed emotions to watch Okie Nobleton Pelham and John Nobleton's gravestones, which fell years ago, finally put back in their rightful places.

"The question I have is, why did it take so long?" Banks said of recent efforts to spruce up the city's oldest black graveyard, Citizens Cemetery on Piedmont Avenue.

"I'm so grateful to see this happening, but it's taken three attempts to get the cemetery clean."

Alice Hulburt, head of Sullins Academy, hopes that question won't have to be asked again.

She led the effort to restore and refurbish the cemetery that holds the remains of about 2,000 people, many of them former slaves.

Hulburt spent about $500 of her own

BRISTOL, Va. — When local historian Bud Phillips drives through town, he sees everywhere the handiwork of early 1900s bricklayer John Fowler.

"Lord only knows how many buildings in the city he's helped build," Phillips said, pointing out that Fowler did the finish work on the city's historic Union Depot. "His work is all over town."

Born at around 1880, Fowler was skilled at his trade by 15, when he set out on his own.

Today, his body lies at Citizens Cemetery on Piedmont Avenue along with those of many other black Bristolians.

Graves nearby hold the remains of Marcellus Shepherd, the city's first black attorney, as well as A.W. White, who helped establish Bristol's first black hospital.

Soldiers from every major American war were interred there, too.

Four Bristolians told the stories of Fowler, Shepherd and White to about 75 students of Sullins Academy who gathered on a recent morning to learn more about the graveyard they'd worked so hard to restore.

Phillips, museum proprietor Wilhelmina Banks and two pastors, the Revs. W.A. Johnson and Jacqueline Oxendine, arrived ready to answer a flood of questions about Citizens Cemetery.

"Why do some of the gravestones lay flat on the ground?" a student asked.

That was a construction preference some people had, the students were told.

"Why are a lot of the people in their 40s?" asked another.

Many were slaves who died young due to a lack of medical care and proper nutrition, Phillips said.

It heartened Banks to see young people interested in the past.

"I think this will help them appreciate the great history that's been found there," she said.

The cemetery began before the Civil War, in the early 1800s, when it was called the Colored Citizens Cemetery.

Slaves from the local King and Susong plantations were buried there.

Another slave cemetery, known as Flat Hollow, lies on Oakview Avenue. The bodies there were moved to Citizens Cemetery in the late 1800s, though historians don't know exactly when.

Blacks continue to be buried at Citizens Cemetery, although it has little room left. Historians believe the remains of some 2,000 people lie there — all but one of them black.

The people of Bristol deemed Pocahontas Hale, a woman of "unsavory reputation" who ran a brothel in the late 19th century, unworthy of interment at East Hill Cemetery on State Street, so they buried her at Citizens Cemetery.

It was a clear example of the attitude toward blacks during that era, Banks said.

"There's no question how they thought of African Americans," she said. "They buried her in the quote, unquote lesser cemetery."

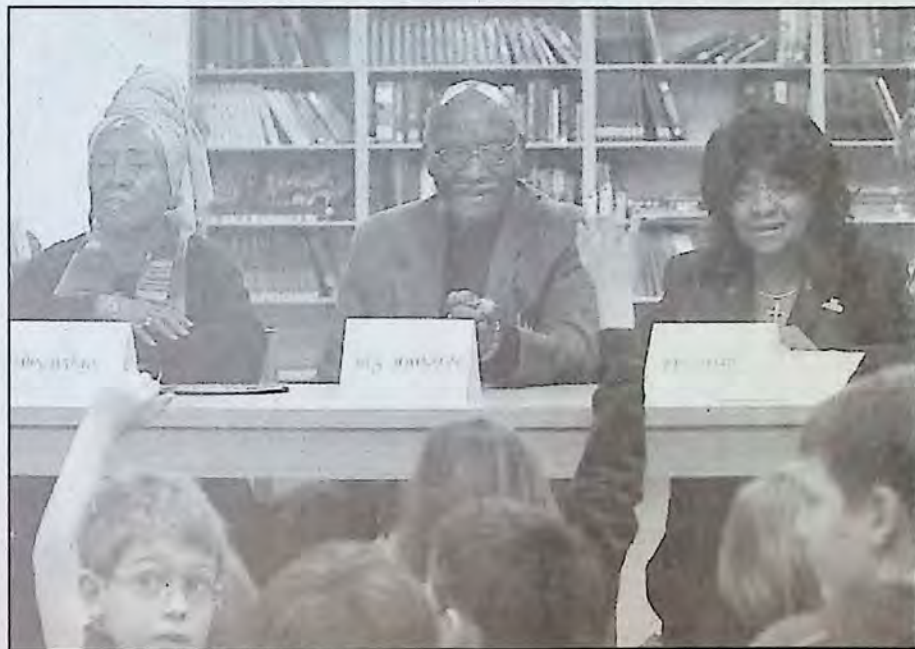

Johnson thanked the children for their work in clearing brush and helping to right overturned gravestones. He said he hoped it was the start of a greater community effort.

"You all have sure done a tremendous job," the pastor said.

The children's work was crucial, said Banks, who called the cemetery "the most important piece of real estate that we have."

"All of the history of the African-American community in Bristol lies there," she said.

money on equipment rentals. Her students joined about 50 volunteers last weekend to clean and beautify the six-acre cemetery.

The weather was brisk, but the sun shone on the group.

"It's fortunate that we've already cleared some of it," Hulburt said as she gazed over a sunny hillside dotted with more fallen headstones. "Last year, the grass was so high you couldn't even see the gravestones."

Cleaning the cemetery will only be half the battle. If the community wants to keep the cemetery from returning to its neglected state, someone must create an organization to maintain it, said Banks, who keeps a museum of local black history and African art.

"A volunteer group can't handle this project on its own," she said. "There has to be a organized, constructive effort with a board of directors."

If that doesn't happen, Bristol will lose something precious, she said.

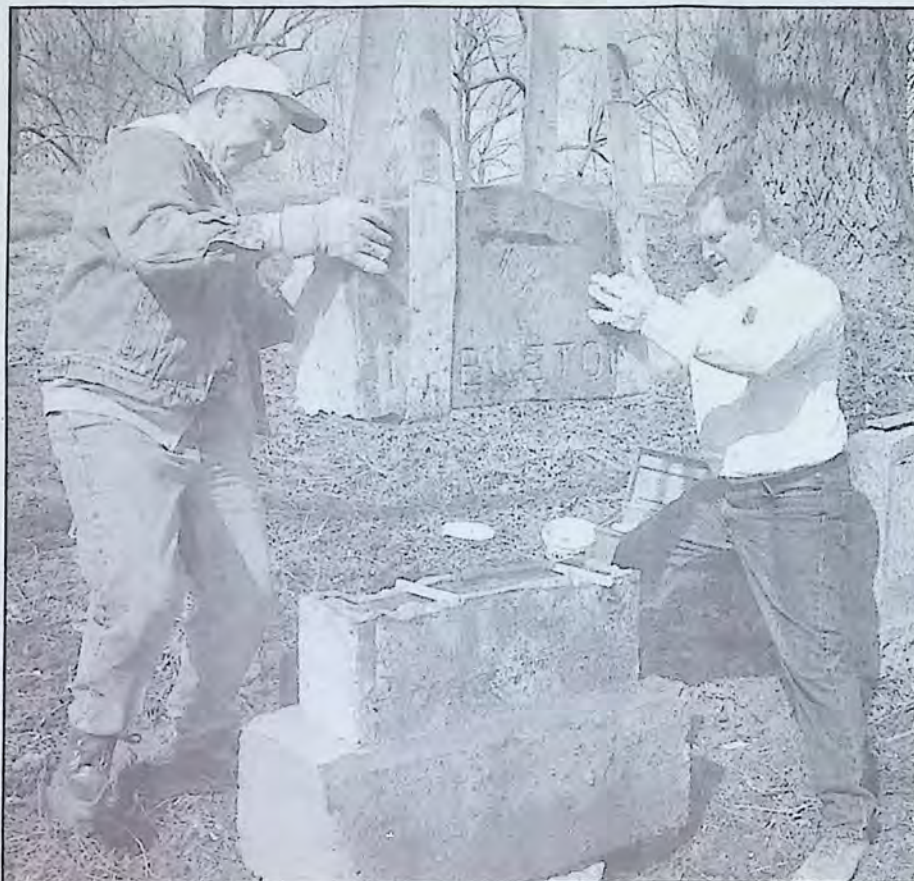

"When a graveyard is neglected, it dies," she said. "Consequently, the history of the people perishes."

Hulburt said she hopes the students' efforts will raise the awareness necessary to accomplish such a feat.

"That's my hope," she said. "I think we've gone further than any other group has gone."

The battle for the restoration of the cemetery began last year.

"Originally, it was going to be a community service project for our school," Hulburt said. "A friend of mine told me about the cemetery.

DAVID CRIGGER/BRISTOL HERALD COURIER

I went over there to take a look at it, and I thought, let's do it."

After that first cleaning, Hulburt began to recognize the history behind the former slave cemetery. She realized the mammoth project would require help from the surrounding community if it were to be successful.

With so little time until spring, Hulburt felt pressure to get the cemetery cleared of brush so it could be seeded in time for fresh grass to cover the ground this year.

"I'm feeling it," she said. "I want to get it done, because I know there are so many people who want to see it get done."

She had many willing helpers from the school and community, she said. Each Tuesday after school, about 10 of her students came to work in the graveyard.

thing," he said. "I hope everyone will pitch in to make it look nice because once we get the grass in, we'll need someone to mow."

Banks eyed the gravestones of her family and remarked that perhaps this time around things would be different and the community would begin to value the history buried on the hill.

"I really applaud this progress, and I really appreciate Mrs. Hulburt," she said. "I hope it's the beginning of an organized effort."

The Rev. Jacqueline Oxendine, who also has relatives buried at the cemetery, relaxed on one of the stones and commented on the cold weather.

After listening to Banks, she smiled.

"I love this new era," she said. "I love the attitude the people have here. It's not such a great effort to get help from the community."

One of the keys to keeping the community involved and history preserved is making sure to educate the young about the community's past, Banks said.

"They can't become part of it if they're not taught it," she said. "It's good for them to recognize we are touched by what came before."

The school hopes to be a part of that, Hulburt said.

"I've been amazed at just how much black history there is here in Bristol, and I think not many people know that," she said. "For kids to understand why slavery was so bad, their stories need to become personal."

"That way, those who are buried (here) are human beings to them."

CITIZENS CEMETERY

Located on 6.2 acres in Bristol, Virginia at end of Piedmont Avenue

Latitude: 36.614 degrees N --- Longitude: 82.188 degrees W

Officially became a cemetery in 1916.

Information researched and compiled by William Campbell

Note: This information was compiled from the following: Sullivan County (Tennessee) Death Records (1908-1925), funeral programs, obituaries from the Bristol Herald Courier (& Virginia-Tennessean), High on a Windy Hill- Vol. II by Sarah Jones, family member interviews, the Social Security Death Index, an abstracted list of Washington County (VA) Death Records (Found on New River Notes Website), and from on-site surveys of the headstones in Citizens Cemetery. All information (including partial info.) that can be read on each headstone is included here.

The following symbols will be used throughout this list:

\** ---Information taken off actual headstone in the Citizens cemetery*

~~~~---Information taken from Sullivan County (TN) Death Records

AA---Afro-American Newspaper

ABGN---Abingdon, Virginia

BCD---Bristol City Directory

BHC---Bristol Herald Courier; Obituary indicates person was buried at Citizens.

BM---Buried Monument: Headstone had to be unearthed

BP---Information obtained from Bristol historian Bud Phillips.

BRTN---Bristol, Tennessee

BRVA---Bristol, Virginia

FI---Family Information: Info. provided by family of or friend of deceased; No headstone.

FP---Funeral Program: Burial information from old funeral programs

MI---Military headstone

NRN---New River Notes: Death info. found on this website that contains abstracted Wash. Co., Virginia death records (from info. obtained from the Library of Virginia in Richmond).

SSDI---Social Security Death Index. This index on the internet was used to find death dates of people who were known to have lived in Bristol. The BHC obituary was then used as a cross reference to locate the place of burial.

SU---Sullins: In 2002, the cemetery was cleaned up by the Job Corps, but some brush, shrubs, & trees were left standing and obscuring many headstones. The SU symbol indicates this particular monument was made visible after the Sullins Academy cleanup in 2005.

" " ---All information included on a headstone is shown here in parentheses.

--- This single mark is used before the names of people who are strongly believed to be buried at Citizens even though there is no hard documentation.

Note I: If more than one symbol is used, then the information from each of these symbols applies to that individual or headstone.

Note II: A few of the people who were originally buried at Citizens were moved to other area cemeteries after they became integrated. Those who were known to have been moved were not included on this list unless headstones still remain at Citizens, but it is still quite possible that there are a few people listed here (who do not have headstones) who have been moved.

Note III: At one time in Bristol, VA there was a Negro cemetery in the Oakview Street area and another one at the site on which the Lee Garden Apartments now exist on the corner of Lee Highway and Euclid Avenue. After these cemeteries were closed the remains were moved to Citizens Cemetery. There is some disagreement as to exactly where the Oakview area cemetery was, so I will include information found in two places. The 1905-1906 Bristol City Directory shows a Colored Cemetery near the corner of Buchanan and Wood Streets. In his research Bristol historian Bud Phillips has found that this colored cemetery was called Flat Hollow in the late 1800's and early 1900's and was located on what is now the corner of Buckner and Oakview. Mr. P. H. Robinson (formerly of Robinson Funeral Home) says that the cemetery he was familiar with was off Oakview and extended from Buckner to Highland Avenue. In any event the remains in this cemetery were moved to what is now Citizens Cemetery.

Note IV: In trying to determine the names of the persons buried in Citizens Cemetery, many long-buried flat stone monuments were carefully unearthed. Sorry to say that quite a few of these monuments were covered with dirt again when a new layer of topsoil was dumped over the cemetery to level the ground. Even some monuments that had not previously been buried were covered up by this new layer of topsoil.

Researcher's Note: I did catch quite a few errors in the old records and in the old obituaries. Since these burial records go back many decades it is possible that there are other errors that I did not know to change, so please feel free to contact any member of the Citizens Cemetery Committee for any corrections. I would like to thank Mr. P.H. Robinson for his invaluable assistance in helping to determine many of the people buried at Citizens after 1951. I would also like to thank the following Bristolians with phenomenal memories: Mr. James M. Morrison, Mrs. Mary Redmon, Mr. James Randolph, Mrs. Cornelia Patton and Mrs. Estella Jackson. Thank you also to Ms. Alice Pace for her helpful research. Thank you Mr. Oliver and Mrs. Charlotte Glispie for putting this information into such a beautiful package. Last but definitely not least, thank you to Bonnie Norris for all your help in research and documentation.
